PETERSBURG, September 22, 1879. "An awkward squad who are," &c. "Which with "is" would be more euphonious, but "who with "are" is not incorrect. Knew, then, this: that under no circumstances can "noho" be used as a relative pronoun with squad as its antecedent. Squad is a thing, and can only have "chich" or "that" as its relative. "The squad which is," or "the squad that is," but for God's sake never write the squad "who," &c. Acknowledge the corn like a SCHOOLBOY. "Schoolboy" missed fire. The sentence we defended as "not incorrect" was not penned by us. So we had nothing to "acknowledge." But above all, "Schoolboy" is in error as to the fact. "Squad" is not a "thing," but a number of persons; and is just as truly a noun of multitude as "board' [of directors], "company" [of soldiers or with it.

His family consisted of bimself, wife, and two children, the older, Mary Emma Price, reaching the age of six years in August last. On February 9th last, while Price was in this city buying goods, this child was lost, evidently stolen, but for what purpose is a mystery. where. Without any definite idea where he pocket all the money he had, some $2,869, and started off. He went to Pittsburgh, and at a small restaurant opposite the railroad depôt be learned that such a child as the one he described had been seen there some days before in company with a tall, dark, welldressed man. Following the trail, Price went to Altoona, thence to Philadelphia, where, after a protracted search, he learned that the man and child had been there eight days before, and had gone to Camden, N. J. Price went to Camden and thence to feeling confident the child was there. At last he learned that the pair bad crossed Hamilton ferry twenty-two days before. Price went to Brooklyn, and there found where the child-stealer and his prey had lodged, at a place kept by Thompson & Henry, corner of West and Franklin streets. Returning to New York and hunting the vessel officers, he found that a man and child had sailed for Cuba on the New Hamburg. He went to Cuba and found that the vessel To Liverpool the father went on the Little Queen, and impatiently awaited the arrival "What ship is that?"

At last. Price had been so long around and so persistent in his inquiries that he was well known, and to find the American consul, with whom he had been in communication, and summon a policeman to | sun rises...... 5:53 | assist him, occupied but a few moments. As soon as the vessel reached the wharf the party boarded, but Price's heart sank within him when he learned that the passengers had been landed at Gravesend dock, below, some thirty minutes previously. "A little girl?" said the captain, when the object of the visit was explained to him: "why there is a little girl down below in the first cabin. A male passenger went ashore at Gravesend, and left his baggage and the child on board. I suppose he will come here directly and claim child and baggage." They went below, and on entering the cabin found a child sitting playing with a doll. Price did not know her, but immediately on seeing him the little one stretched her arms and screamed, "My papa!" She was dressed elegantly, but her luxuriant hair had been cropped close. She had been well taken care of in every respect, but had grown thin. When the child spoke Price home, and would run to anybody, but since her recovery she manifests a great aversion to strangers.

The police watched the baggage of the mysterious passenger, but he never claimed it. It was searched, and found to consist of rich clothing and some letters on ordinary in the control of the flew to her, and she has rarely left his arms

"The old Queen's Bench prison is advertised for sale. A speculator has the brilliant idea of purchasing the premises, in order to turn them into a club for the declassés, under the style and title of the Sponging House. Nobody is to be eligible for membership unless he can prove that he has compounded with his creditors, served a term as a financial purge, failed to meet his engagements at Tatt's on a settling day, sojourned at Boulogue-sur-Mer, or has don something of a kindred nature. The atrium of the building is to be graced with busts of Dick Sheridan, Theodore Hook, and of him who was once known as 'the first gentleman in Europe.' All orders are to be strictly accompanied by prepayment in bullion. I can foresee that this will be the jolliest rendezvous in town, and a most successful venture for the promoter. As in Australia, in the last generation, it will be considered excessively bad form to make any allusions to personal antecedents. There is just one dangerous feature about the undertakingtoo many men soay ruin themselves tempo-rarily in order to qualify for admission."—
